What is C-TPAT?

Customs-Trade Partnership Against Terrorism (C-TPAT) is a security initiative created by the U.S. government after the 9/11 incident.

Soon after the 9/11 incident, the Bureau of Customs and Border Protection in the Homeland Security Department imposes a series of import measures to protect and to facilitate trade. C-TPAT being a key element of this security plan plays a critical role in fighting terrorism and strengthening global supply chains.

Since its initial proposal in November 2001, C-TPAT has grown from 7 members to over 10,000 participants now and the number is still increasing. It is called the largest and most successful government-business partnership coming out of 9/11. Today, C-TPAT has evolved into a global security effort; its key elements are adopted by over 160 member countries of the World Customs Organization.

The U.S. government strongly urges US importers and their overseas business partners to observe and comply with the C-TPAT security criteria when they bring products to the United States.

Due to the impact of 9/11 event, the rules of international trade business has changed dramatically. You need someone who is knowledgeable to navigate through all the complex security requirements for you.
